As a mechanical engineering student, Kandice Kreamer Fults was interested in creating alternative means of transportation. However, she realised it was not enough to provide green options—she wanted to understand why people made transportation choices! She brings that human curiosity to Cosmopolis at the VUB where she works with other urban researchers on understanding household and gendered transportation behaviours and their impact on society.